SYNOPSIS

The word Development gives you both positive and negative result. One side it change your daily life style on the other hand it destroys a natural. We human beings depends on nature, if this developing world destroying this nature, we cannot imagine what will happen for our future generation. Due to the growing urbanization and for the name of development and planning most of the fertile land of Katmandu valley turns into concrete jungle. This is happen due to lack of proper planning in urbanization and lack of wide vision.

This 35-minute documentary will explore the social, cultural, and personal ramifications of how a framer is struggling with traditional life style and growing urbanization .More than 60 % of green vegetables for Kathmandu valley has fulfilled by a vegetable garden of "Nagadesh".Most of the Nagadeshi people depends on agriculture. They spend most of their life time playing with soil. They are following their early days working pattern and only few of them follows the modern technology. With the growing of Housing company and proper shelter planning, these fertile lands is about to turn into concrete jungle.

Although we are focusing on story of a farmer who is fighting for their identity and livelihood. A big question on their future generation. Showing farmer's life style indicating that THE FERTILE LAND IS IN ENDANGERING. By this story telling we believe that this documentary will have strong national and international audience appeal.
